Fitness Adaptation II Brown University

fitness and adaptation ii Adaptation is a central issue or concept in evolution, but one must be very specific when defining or deciding that one is actually "looking at" an adaptation or that something is adapted.

Fitness and its role in evolutionary genetics

Without differences in fitness natural selection cannot act and adaptation cannot occur. Given its central role in evolutionary biology, one might expect the idea of fitness to be both straightforward and widely understood among geneticists.

What is the difference between evolution and adaptation

Adaptations are the result of evolution, but evolution produces changes that are not always adaptations. Remember, evolution is random. If a change is better for the species survival, it is an adaptation. But the change can also have a neutral or negative effect on survival.
