Model Building Phenix

The process of model building iterates phase improvement using density modification methods with automated map interpretation to build models, and model refinement. This minimally requires an experimental density map, experimental diffraction data, and the sequence of the molecule(s) in the crystal. The output will be a PDB file with the automatically built model and map coefficients for the

Model building and more in the AutoBuild GUI

A third variant of the AutoBuild GUI is dedicated to generating density modified maps with no additional building. This version of the GUI is single-processor only, but runs in much less time than the more advanced versions. Users who wish to create a prime-and-switch map after molecular replacement should use this interface. Note that if an input model is supplied, the default behavior is
