Temperate agriculture usually refers to large scale industrial agriculture systems, in temperate areas which are prolific in terms of production outputs. A significant proportion of global agricultural production originates from temperate countries and this proportion is likely to increase with climate change. Temperate agriculture is characterised by sophisticated agronomic practices, intense mechanisation and use of inputs like groundwater irrigation, chemical fertilisers, pesticides and Integrating CCs with crop livestock systems necessitates a better understanding of the effects of the new scenarios of single and multi-species CC management on soil and crop production. Published studies assessing the effects of haying or grazing CCs are few (Franzluebbers and Stuedemann, 2008 ; Blanco-Canqui et al., 2013a).
