interactions between the so-called World Ocean and the atmosphere. Chemical oceanography is the study of the composition of seawater and of the physical, biological, and chemical processes that govern changes in composition in time and space. Marine geology deals with the geologic evolution of the ocean basins, while biological oceanography

Climate Circulation currents and ocean atmosphere

Circulation, currents, and ocean-atmosphere interaction. The circulation of the ocean is a key factor in air temperature distribution. Ocean currents that have a northward or southward component, such as the warm Gulf Stream in the North Atlantic or the cold Peru (Humboldt) Current off South America, effectively exchange heat between low and

Aromatic aromatic interactions in structures of proteins

Interactions between the aromatic amino acid residues have a significant influence on the protein structures and protein-DNA complexes. These interactions individually provide little stability to the structure; however, together they contribute significantly to the conformational stability of the protein structure.
